

THE TRIBUNE.

JACK FROST.—By H. STRED.
"O, ho! O, ho!" quoth old Jack Frost,
As he sped on his wintry way;
And he laughed, delighted,
As he nipped and blighted.
The things deemed most gay,
He made the old oak, and the tall,
Bend low at his wavy blast,
And the last yellow leaves to quiver and fall
Before his might as he passed.

"O! ho! O, ho!" quoth old Jack Frost,
As he looked at the farmer's fire-side,
And the huge log,
On the bright iron dog,
And the flagon and tankard beside;
And he heard the gay jest, and the loud merry laugh,
As they trill'd forth their Christmas rhymes—
How happy they grew as the liquor they d'quaff'd—
Jack gave a huzza for old times!

"O, ho! O, ho!" quoth old Jack Frost,
As a nobleman's house he passed through,
And saw turkey and chine,
And brandy and wine;
These, indeed, are rare times for you!"

The rich dwelt in his easy arm-chair,
And his black, fiercely and bold;
But he never thought one morsel to spare,
For the time that were hungry and cold.

"O, ho! O, ho!" sighed old Jack Frost,
As he loo'd in the poor man's hut;
Dark, dirty, and drear,
And no fire to cheer,
Without window or door that world shut!
And a half-bred mother her children cuddled,
To give warmth to the nestling brood;
And the little ones cried, as together they huddled;
"Oh, mother, pray give us some food!"

"O, ho! O, ho!" sighed old Jack Frost,
At a sight he lovd not to see,
Condemed by the law,
To feast upon skillets;

And he heard the poor voices refused even that,
By the thin-hearted overers;
He believed not their tale, as cosy he sat,
Their heart-rending case to hear.

"O, ho! O, ho!" he doled forth Jack Frost,
As he passed through all parts;
"I come here to see,
Mirth, comfort, and glee,
Not to deaden and freeze up men's hearts.
'Till we leave to the bright sun's beam,
Whose brilliancy I laugh'd at before;
And may the gay warmth of its genial gleam,
Cause the Rich to remember the Poor!"
